

Meet Elizabeth Abraha

Ms. Abraha, a George Washington University Hospital nurse, supported by hundreds of her coworkers, says:

“Two years ago, DCNA union officials made all kinds of promises to my coworkers and me. They have not only failed to deliver on them, but have driven a wedge between a lot of my coworkers,”<sup>1</sup>

Promises made. Promises broken.

Almost 3 years ago...

DCNA officials made a bunch of promises to Ms. Abraha and her coworkers.

Three years later...

The union failed to deliver on all its promises and has yet to deliver a first-time contract.

The only thing the union has delivered...

Is driving a wedge between nurses in the bargaining unit.

Ms. Abraha and her colleagues have had enough...

Now, Ms. Abraha and hundreds of her coworkers have decided to decertify the union and take back their voice and power.

GW nurses refuse to be union pawns.

After years of broken promises, nurses refuse to fall for union lies and be used as a vehicle to generate revenue for the union.

The union continues to overpromise and under-deliver without providing results.

Nurses remain in status quo without any changes to their benefits or pay increases during the negotiation process.

GW nurses are taking back their voice. It's time for a new path forward.
